

Chase Kroll

Director of Strategic Communications
Washington, D.C.

Biography

Chase Kroll brings years of diversified experience from the many communications roles he has previously held. Having run major political campaigns, legislative operations, and high-impact advocacy efforts in Washington, D.C. for U.S. and international clients, Chase is able to provide clients with impactful strategic communications advice.

Before founding Kroll Global, Chase was Vice President at Go BIG Media, an award-winning full-service media and consulting firm. In this role, he ran successful advocacy and PR campaigns for a wide variety of clients, including top-tier defense contractors, national trade associations, and nonprofits. He was also head of media relations, regularly booking and training clients for national media interviews.

Chase developed a notable track record in his time as senior associate and lobbyist at David Turch & Associates, where he oversaw an assorted portfolio of domestic and global clients. His background includes time on Capitol Hill as a legislative advisor for a high-profile member of Congress, and leadership positions on several federal campaigns, including campaign manager of (at that time) the most expensive winning House race in history.
